What does the LRC do?

- Train attorneys, victim advocates, and judges about the laws and issues affecting survivors in interstate custody and domestic violence cases
- Assist survivors to find attorneys in interstate cases involving a jurisdictional legal issue
- Provide support to attorneys, victim advocates, and others in individual interstate cases
- Maintain a website with jurisdictional and related laws (www.lrcvaw.org)
- Maintain a database of attorneys and programs available to assist survivors in interstate cases
- Offer resources to attorneys, including a law school research and writing curriculum on interstate custody and domestic violence

When is it appropriate to refer a case to the LRC?

- The case involves domestic violence
- There is a child custody issue
- The case involves more than one state

When is it appropriate to refer a case to the LRC?

- Please note that we do not handle international cases; these involve different laws and issues
- We do not directly represent survivors, but we assist survivors to find civil attorneys when a jurisdictional legal issue is involved
- Some of these cases involve criminal charges against a survivor; in such cases, she may need a criminal defense attorney as well as a civil attorney

How can survivors find a civil attorney?

Contact the LRC regarding interstate cases

In other cases:

- Find out if local programs receive VAWA funds to represent survivors
- Check the local legal services programs and law school clinical programs
- Call local law firms and ask about pro bono representation
- Consult state domestic violence coalitions and local domestic violence shelters/programs for referrals to private attorneys
- Check with local bar association, women's bar association and volunteer attorney programs for referrals

Who are we and when are we available?

- We have 2 part-time attorneys on staff and one project coordinator
- We are open during business hours E.S.T.

Highlights of the UCCJEA What provisions may be used to assist survivors?

The Uniform Child Custody
Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act
(UCCJEA)

Does a state have the power to enter a custody order over a child?

UCCJEA:

- Developed in 1997
- Designed to replace the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA)
- Intended to reconcile differences between the UCCJA and PKPA
- So far all states and D.C. have enacted it except for Massachusetts
- Significant improvement for battered women

UCCJEA Adoption Ohio Oklahoma Alabama Louisiana Alaska Maine Oregon Pennsylvania Rhode Island South Carolina Arizona Arkansas Maryland Michigan Minnesota California Colorado Mississippi Connecticut South Dakota Missouri Delaware District of Columbia Tennessee Texas Montana U.S. Virgin Islands Utah Florida Nebraska Georgia Nevada Vermont Virginia Washington Hawaii Idaho New Hampshire New Jersey New Mexico Illinois West Virginia Indiana New York lowa Wisconsin North Carolina North Dakota Wyoming Kansas Kentucky

When may a court hear a custody case? UCCJEA Jurisdictional bases: Home state trumps other bases (except emergency) Significant connection "More appropriate forum" jurisdiction "No other state" jurisdiction *Note that the UCCJEA applies after a child is born

Temporary emergency jurisdiction:

- Where "necessary in an emergency to protect the child because the child, or a sibling or parent of the child, is subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse."
- Child must be present in the state

 This means that a court can exercise emergency jurisdiction in domestic violence cases where the mother (but not the child) has been abused

UCCJEA:

Filing for temporary emergency jurisdiction:

- State procedures vary; UCCJEA does not specify procedure and forms
- May be able to file for temporary emergency order under protection order statute
- Submit evidence establishing the emergency: evidence of abuse of parent and/or child

Inconvenient forum . . .
(under the UCCJEA, a party can ask a court to transfer a custody case elsewhere)

UCCJEA:

Inconvenient Forum:

Factors explicitly include:

- Whether domestic violence has occurred and is likely to continue and which state could best protect the parties and the child
- The length of time the child has resided outside of the state
- The distance between the two courts
- The relative finances of the parties

UCCJEA:

Inconvenient Forum:

Factors explicitly include:

- The agreement of the parties
- The nature and location of the evidence including the child's testimony
- The ability of each court to decide the issue expeditiously and the procedures necessary to present the evidence
- The familiarity of each court with the facts and issues in the pending litigation

Case Scenario

Lila Smith calls you. You learn in the brief conversation that Lila and Philip have been married for five years and have lived in a rural part of Maryland. They have one child, a seven-month old daughter named Annie. Philip has physically and emotionally abused Lila since shortly after they were married. Philip has never been charged or convicted criminally for the abuse, and Lila has never filed for a civil protection order.

Case Scenario continued

Last night, Philip held a gun to Lila's head in front of Annie and threatened to kill her.

Lila tells you that she wants to leave and move to Wisconsin, where her family lives and where she hopes to find a job.

Relocation Checklist

What legal issues does Lila need to consider

Legal Issues in Relocation

- Has a custody order been entered previously, including as part of a protection order?
- Can she leave without violating the order?
- Will she be charged with contempt or parental kidnapping (criminal)?
 - Domestic violence exemption?Domestic violence defense?

 - Child protection defense?
- Will the state from which she is fleeing have continuing exclusive jurisdiction?
- Can she leave without violating the state relocation law?

Legal Issues in Relocation

- Should she file for a protection order before she leaves the state?
- Will she be able to file for a protection order in the new state (personal jurisdiction)?
- Should she file for custody before she leaves the state?
- Will she be required to return to a state to litigate a custody case?
- How do the custody laws differ in the two states?
- Are there other legal protections that could keep her safer in one state versus the other?
- Are there immigration-related consequences to leaving the state?
- Will it be more difficult to seek child support or a divorce if she leaves?

Practical tips

WHEN SURVIVORS LEAVE:

- It is important to find out whether a case has been filed in the jurisdiction they have left.
- A left-behind parent may be permitted by a judge to move forward in a custody case even if the other parent does not receive actual notice of the proceeding.
- It is critical to participate in court proceedings in the home state, either in person or by telephone.

Practical tips

WHEN BATTERERS ABDUCT A CHILD:

Survivors may need to seek enforcement of custody orders in the state in which the child has been abducted. In most cases, they will need a "pick up order" from a judge in that state, even if they already have a valid custody order from another state.

Should Lila get a protection order before she moves?

The decision is very complex and legal advice should be sought.

Benefits of obtaining a protection order:

- If it is issued, this will document the violence, which could be helpful for jurisdictional and custody arguments in the future It may help protect the survivor and would be enforceable nationally
- If the survivor is awarded custody as part of the protection order, the abuser would not be able to take the children away from her
- The survivor may not be able to get a protection order from a court in another state later if that court does not have personal jurisdiction over the abuser

Risks of obtaining a protection order:

If the protection order is not issued, the abuser will claim that he never abused the survivor (in future legal proceedings)

If the abuser is awarded some sort of regular visitation, the survivor will have to comply which may make it impossible to leave the state

If a custody order is issued as part of the protection order, this may give the issuing state continuing, exclusive jurisdiction, forcing the survivor to litigate further custody proceedings in the issuing state

Risks of obtaining a protection order (cont'd):

If a custody order is issued as part of the protection order, this may trigger the state's parental kidnapping or relocation laws if the survivor leaves

If the survivor seeks a protection order in your state, it may make it more difficult to win an "inconvenient forum" argument later (if she asks your state to transfer the long-term custody case to another state)

Parental Kidnapping In some states, leaving the state with your children could violate state parental kidnapping laws . . . These criminal laws may have different names: Parental kidnapping Custodial interference Child abduction Child concealment

Parental Kidnapping

Advocates need to be familiar with these criminal laws because advising a survivor that she can leave the state with her children could subject her to criminal charges . . .

32

State parental kidnapping laws

Must there be a court order for kidnapping to occur?

- Some states require flight with children in violation of a court order
- Some criminalize flight even in the absence of a court order
- Some state laws are unclear
- Some expressly criminalize fleeing in both contexts, but create more serious penalties for violating a court order

State parental kidnapping laws What type of intent is required by these laws? They vary by state. Usually, the parent must intend to do something more than just leave the state with the child Often require things such as "intent to conceal the child from the other parent" or "intent to deprive the other parent of visitation"

State parental kidnapping laws Are there any protections for domestic violence survivors? They vary by state. Some states have exemptions, others have defenses

Exemptions: In a few states, language in the parental kidnapping statute exempts victims from prosecution Usually must satisfy a condition for it to apply: e.g., the person must report to law enforcement or to a prosecutor that she has left the state with the children and why, and she must file for custody within a specified amount of time These types of conditions pose problems for many survivors

State parental kidnapping laws Defenses: Unlike exemptions, defenses generally require at least the initial involvement of the criminal justice system Victims may be arrested and jailed initially and permitted to raise a defense later

State parental kidnapping laws Types of Defenses: Fleeing domestic violence Fleeing harm to self Fleeing harm to child General criminal law defense: Necessity

Consequences: Even if a survivor is acquitted of the criminal charges, often the children are returned to the batterer while a victim is incarcerated or awaiting trial. Additionally, she may lose her children in a subsequent custody case if a civil court judge perceives her flight as an attempt to deprive the perpetrator of contact with the children or as an attempt to forum-shop.
